What is Geocaching?

Geocaching is a real-world outdoor hide and seek adventure that blends technology with treasure hunting. Participants use GPS-enabled devices—like smartphones or handheld GPS units—to navigate to specific coordinates where a hidden container, called a "geocache," awaits discovery. These caches can range in size from tiny magnetic capsules to large ammo boxes, and they often contain a logbook for finders to sign, along with small trinkets for trading. The thrill lies in the hunt: decoding clues, exploring unfamiliar terrain, and uncovering hidden spots that might otherwise go unnoticed.

More than just a game, geocaching fosters a global community of explorers who share a love for nature, problem-solving, and discovery. With millions of caches hidden across every continent—including underwater and in space—geocaching encourages travel, environmental stewardship, and creative expression. Whether you're hiking through forests, strolling through urban parks, or solving puzzles from your living room, geocaching offers a unique way to connect with the world around you and with fellow adventurers worldwide.

History of Geowoodstock?

Geowoodstock stands as a legendary celebration in the geocaching world, with a vibrant history that mirrors the growth of the global geocaching community. It all began in 2003, when JoGPS (Joe Armstrong), a passionate geocacher from Tennessee, organized a gathering in Louisville, Kentucky for those who had found over 1,000 caches—a major milestone at the time.

What started as a modest meetup quickly evolved into an annual tradition, traveling to different cities across the United States. In 2006, Geowoodstock IV made history by becoming the first geocaching event to earn MEGA status, a designation awarded to events that attract 500 or more attendees.

Over the years, Geowoodstock has grown into a destination event, drawing thousands of geocachers from around the world during Memorial Day or Fourth of July weekends. Its international debut came in 2022, when Geowoodstock XIX was hosted in Abbotsford, Canada, marking a new chapter in its global reach.

The Geowoodstock Host Committee is thrilled to welcome geocachers to Hutchinson, Kansas for the 22nd installment of this iconic event—promising another unforgettable experience for adventurers and explorers alike.
